"paperback" is worth boxloads of the hard-cover books they waste their money on.

I do not think that this is true only of the people I have tried to "sell" your book to. It is probably a general feeling, and I am sincerely sorry, because this book should be in the hands of everyone who was ever interested in those Four Days. I hope that a new, revised edition of "Whitewash" will reach the public — in such volume that no one can say he can't afford to pay $.95 or $1.00 for the paper-back, and that your wonderful work will bring you the return it deserves. If I have helped by my little criticisms to make the new book a tiny bit more accurate than it already is — I am grateful for that opportunity. Thanks again —

Yours sincerely —

Dear Mr. Weisberg —

The autographed copy of "Whitewash" arrived today, and I want to thank you most sincerely. I do not wish to sound "corny", but I shall treasure this autographed work among my most treasured books — and I have close to 1,000 in my personal library.

As you have probably read by now in my latest letter to you before this one of thanks, I had to return my borrowed copy of "Whitewash" before completing it. I am thrilled to have my own copy now, and since you told me in your letter that you'll be "happy to hear from me again" if I find any other errors (or — more correctly — what I think are errors), I will do so. I am so glad that you did not, after all, resent my calling these to your attention.

In your preface, you state that you had much help in preparing the book, and yet I would imagine that having to put it out in what you call "the least desirable of all forms", I am sure that you were deprived of many services the ordinary author takes for granted — double checks, proof-reading, checking references — and despite this lack of help from publishers, you have a finished work practically free of errors.

I am not reading it — I am studying it. That is why I found the 15 or 20 errors I have mentioned in my other two letters. And, when I do find them, I feel it only right to call them to your attention, in case (as I said before) you have the much-deserved opportunity of getting out a regular edition, in either hard-back or paper. I am glad you did not misconstrue my sincere desire to be helpful.

It is a shame that it was you who "broke the ground" and that as a consequence others are now able to get publishers, whereas you were not. Your tremendous work in checking and writing — and then publicizing by radio and TV appearances have undoubtedly helped men like Mr. Epstein and Mr. Lane to succeed with publishers who would not touch "Whitewash".

You were the pioneer, and I feel proud to have your letter and this autographed copy of your book.

I have been trying to interest my friends in buying your book. To my knowledge, they have not done so simply because they say they can't see paying "$4.95" for a "paperback". Yet, I try to convince them that this
